A Gallery Without Walls: South Africa's First Mobile Walk-In Art Gallery

Our mobile gallery is more than just a vehicle it's a symbol of inclusivity, creativity, and community. It travels to markets, schools, community events, and public spaces, transforming ordinary locations into extraordinary art experiences. By breaking down the physical and psychological barriers that often surround the art world, we create opportunities for people from all walks of life to engage with art in a meaningful way.

One of the defining moments in Ayanda's career was her work with Wakaba Mutheki, a celebrated artist whose talent earned him the dubbed "African Van Gogh." Managing the administrative aspects of Mutheki's career gave Ayanda a firsthand understanding of the complexities of the art world. She saw the immense potential of African artists and the barriers they often face, from limited resources to a lack of platforms for showcasing their work. This experience ignited a desire to create a space where artists could not only display their talent but also receive the support and guidance they need to succeed.
